

BEING SAFER:

- ◆ Choose not to use drugs and alcohol. If you do, set limits for yourself
- ◆ Choose abstinence. If you've made that commitment to yourself, you'll be less likely to have sex if you are drunk or high
- ◆ Be a buddy. Bring a buddy. Take turns watching out for each other
- ◆ Don't share needles or drug equipment
- ◆ If you're going to have sex, practice safer sex. Don't exchange body fluids like semen, vaginal fluids and blood. Be prepared with condoms
- ◆ Choose less risky activities like making out
- ◆ To protect yourself from date rape drugs, don't drink anything you didn't open yourself and never leave a drink unattended. Stop drinking anything that looks or tastes odd

If you've had unprotected sex, or if you can't remember what happened, get tested for STIs. If you are a girl, get emergency contraception to help avoid a pregnancy. Have a pregnancy test done if you've missed your period.

Your source for sexual health information

Drugs and alcohol impair your decision making. If you drink or use drugs you are much more likely to:

- ◆ have sex with someone you don't know well, or don't like
- ◆ have unprotected sex
- ◆ perform a sex act you normally wouldn't do
- ◆ hook up with someone you normally wouldn't
- ◆ not remember if you had sex
- ◆ become a victim of a sexual assault
- ◆ commit a sexual assault

Alcohol is a depressant. But it starts by depressing your inhibitions, so at first you act loud, wild or silly and you do things you wouldn't normally do. You often can't make good decisions. You might not think or care about using a condom or birth control when you are drunk or high. Often, the next day, people who have been drinking regret what they have done the night before.

Some drugs like cocaine, heroin, crack, and crystal meth are highly addictive. Drug addictions can make you behave in reckless ways, such as having unprotected sex, sometimes with strangers, multiple partners, or for money to buy more drugs. Having unprotected sex (vaginal, anal or oral) puts you at a higher risk of getting sexually transmitted infections (STIs) and unplanned pregnancy. Using IV drugs (injecting drugs) carries an extra risk of getting viruses like Hepatitis B and HIV if drug equipment or needles are shared.

Some people think drinking or taking drugs will make them better lovers. In fact, large amounts of alcohol and some drugs affect sexual health- they can cause low desire, less vaginal lubrication (making sex uncomfortable), and problems getting or keeping erections. Also, getting drunk and throwing up is a real turn off!

Substances can reduce your inhibitions and lead to a lot of risk taking.

Pregnant women using alcohol, tobacco, and other drugs risk harming their developing fetus. Having just one sip is like giving the fetus 3 sips.

New information about Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder shows that even a small amount of alcohol can affect the fetus in harmful ways that may not be noticeable until later in life.

Respect Yourself

People with lower self esteem are more easily influenced by peer pressure to use drugs and alcohol or to participate in a sexual activity when they are not ready. If friends are pressuring you, they're not really your friends. If a partner pressures you, it's not a healthy relationship.

...and hang with people who respect you!
